Hello there, I am Lori Jones and you have landed yourself on my electronic portfolio for the Masters of Educational Technology at UBC. If you happened across this by accident there might be something here of interest for you even if it's just my list of tech tools you can use. If you are here because you are interested in what MET is like enjoy the timeline might be the place to start for you as it briefly outlines each of the courses I took. If you have found your way here because I shared the link with you, Hi!

This website revolves around my Journey through MET. I have organized the journey with my three goals in mind which you can find on the MET goals tab. Each goal is linked to my assignment artifacts that might give you a little insight into how the course has influenced me and my learning about technology in education. You can navigate to those assignment artifacts by clicking on a goal and going to the corresponding page. You will find buttons at the bottom of those pages to help you navigate back and forth. The Timeline tab will give you an overview of the chronological order in which I took the courses and a brief teaser from my blog for each. Click on the course to find my full blog post.

The Tech tools and reference tab will show you which tech tools I have discovered and used over the course of my MET and some of the written resources I have used.
If you want to know more about me check out the Bio tab.

Thank you for dropping by and feel free to contact me using the contact tab if you have questions or would like to collaborate on something.
